INTRODUCTION

In the dynamic landscape of tourism, the captivating potential of event tourism has become a focal point for both researchers and practitioners (Getz, 2020). This multifaceted form of tourism possesses a unique ability to elevate the attractiveness, image, and prosperity of a destination (Dedeog̃lu et al., 2019; Al-Dweik, 2020; Lu et al., 2020). Scholarly works, as highlighted by Getz (2020) and Dedeog̃lu et al. (2019), emphasize the interweaving elements of tourist experiences, city branding, and the pervasive impact of social media in understanding the complexities of event tourism.

However, despite the growing recognition of its significance, the exploration of the dynamic interplay within event tourism remains relatively limited, particularly within the distinctive contexts of developing countries, each with its unique characteristics and challenges (Zhang et al., 2019; Popescu et al., 2020; Agyapong and Yuan, 2022).

This research endeavors to delve into the intricate dynamics of event tourism through a comprehensive approach, integrating diverse theoretical and empirical perspectives. At its core, the primary objective is to identify the factors that exert influence on tourist experiences, city branding, and the social media impact on destinations that host event tourism. By examining the interrelationships among these three facets, the study aims to unveil insights with implications for the sustainable development of event tourism.

In acknowledging the limited exploration of event tourism within developing nations, the research sets a specific focus on these contexts, recognizing the unique challenges and opportunities they present. The theoretical contribution of this study lies in enriching the existing literature by unraveling the dynamics and interactions among various aspects of event tourism (Cudny et al., 2022; Teixeira et al., 2019). On a practical level, the research seeks to provide actionable recommendations for stakeholders involved in event tourism, including governmental bodies, event organizers, and the broader tourism industry (Getz, 2020; Dedeog̃lu et al., 2019; Lustono and Permatasari, 2022). These recommendations aim to guide the design and implementation of effective and efficient event tourism initiatives, aligning with the overarching goal of sustainable destination development.

As we navigate through the following sections, the research unfolds the intricate tapestry of event tourism, shedding light on its complexities and offering valuable insights for its strategic development. The synthesis of theoretical frameworks, empirical evidence, and practical implications forms the basis of our exploration.

Drawing from the works of Getz (2020), Dedeog̃lu et al. (2019), and a myriad of other contributors in the field (Cahyani et al., 2023; Ćizmić and Ćaušević, 2017; Rashidi et al., 2020), the theoretical foundation of this research expands upon existing literature by unraveling the intricate dynamics within event tourism. By delving into the interplay of tourist experiences, city branding, and social media impact, the study aims to contribute theoretical insights that deepen our understanding of the complexities inherent in this form of tourism.

Beyond theoretical enrichment, this research aspires to offer practical guidance for stakeholders navigating the realm of event tourism, particularly in the context of developing nations. Governmental bodies, event organizers, and the broader tourism industry can benefit from the recommendations crafted based on the study's findings (Getz, 2020; Dedeoğlu et al., 2019; Pakarti et al., 2017). These recommendations aim to inform decision-making processes and contribute to the design and implementation of effective strategies for event tourism initiatives.

As we progress through the subsequent sections, each layer of the intricate tapestry of event tourism will be carefully unfolded. From the factors influencing tourist experiences to the strategic implications for sustainable development, the research aims to provide a comprehensive understanding of event tourism dynamics.

The journey through the sections mirrors the intricacies of event tourism itself, offering valuable insights that extend beyond the theoretical realm into actionable strategies for stakeholders. By the conclusion of this exploration, it is anticipated that a nuanced understanding of event tourism dynamics will emerge, contributing both theoretically and practically to the broader field of tourism studies.

LITERATURE REVIEW

Event tourism is a multifaceted phenomenon involving the planned and temporary movement of individuals to destinations where events serve as the primary motivators for travel (Getz, 2020). This niche within the tourism industry encompasses a diverse array of events, such as cultural festivals, sports competitions, business conferences, entertainment shows, and heritage celebrations. These events vary in purpose, theme, scale, and impact, contributing to the richness and diversity of event tourism experiences (Buhalis, 2022). As an influential component of the tourism landscape, event tourism holds the potential to generate a myriad of benefits for host destinations.

Events play a pivotal role in enhancing the attractiveness, image, and competitiveness of a destination (Getz, 2020). They contribute to the creation of memorable experiences for tourists, stimulate economic and social development, and foster cultural and environmental conservation. The positive impacts of well-executed events reverberate throughout the destination, making event tourism a valuable and strategic sector for many regions globally (Lu et al., 2020).

However, the dynamic nature of event tourism brings forth a set of challenges and risks that demand careful management. These challenges include the need to ensure the quality and sustainability of events, striking a balance between the interests and expectations of diverse stakeholders, and addressing the negative impacts events may impose on destinations. Issues such as crowding, congestion, pollution, and crime must be managed effectively to maintain the harmony between the event and the host community (González Reverté & Morales Pérez, 2017).

Navigating the uncertainties and unpredictabilities inherent in event tourism, such as changes in demand, supply, and external factors, adds another layer of complexity (Getz, 2020). Therefore, understanding the dynamics and complexities of event tourism is crucial for developing effective strategies to plan, organize, and evaluate events and their impacts on host destinations.

This research emphasizes three key aspects integral to event tourism: tourist experiences, city branding, and social media impact. These aspects contribute significantly to the overall success and sustainability of event tourism.

Tourist experiences constitute a central focus in the realm of event tourism. Defined as the subjective and emotional responses of tourists to events and the destinations they visit, these experiences are shaped by a multitude of factors. Tourist characteristics, event attributes, destination image, and the interactions among tourists, hosts, and service providers all play a crucial role in influencing these experiences (Al-Dweik, 2020; Čizmić & Čaušević, 2017; Li, 2021). The outcomes of these experiences, including satisfaction, loyalty, word-of-mouth, and behavioral intentions, have a profound impact on the performance and competitiveness of events and destinations (Al-Dweik, 2020; Rasoolimanesh et al., 2021).

City branding is another critical facet of event tourism. This process involves creating and communicating a distinctive and positive identity for a city to attract and retain tourists, investors, residents, and other stakeholders (Buhalis, 2022). Hosting events becomes a strategic element in enhancing city branding, as it provides an opportunity to showcase the unique features, values, and culture of a city. By creating a favorable environment and atmosphere for both visitors and locals, city branding contributes to increasing the awareness, recognition, and reputation of a city. It also fosters a sense of pride and belonging among the residents, thereby supporting the overall development and innovation of the city (Boonsiritomachai & Phonthanukitithaworn, 2019; Lu et al., 2020; Nugroho & Pradini, 2022).

The third key aspect is the social media impact on event tourism. This refers to the influence of social media platforms, such as Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, and YouTube, on the information search, decision-making, and post-visit behavior of tourists. Additionally, social media plays a crucial role in the promotion, communication, and evaluation of events and destinations (Agyapong & Yuan, 2022). Social media platforms facilitate the access, exchange, and co-creation of information and content among tourists and other stakeholders. They enhance the engagement, participation, and loyalty of tourists, enabling the monitoring, feedback, and improvement of events and destinations (Agyapong & Yuan, 2022; Cahyani et al., 2023; Pratiwi & Prakosa, 2021).

While social media presents several benefits for event tourism, it also poses challenges and risks. Managing the quality and credibility of information and content becomes crucial, and dealing with negative comments and reviews requires careful attention. Protecting the privacy and security of tourists and other stakeholders is also an ongoing concern in the realm of social media impact on event tourism (Agyapong & Yuan, 2022; Lustono & Permatasari, 2022; Slamet & Juvoni, 2023).

The literature review provides insights into the intricate and dynamic nature of event tourism. The interconnections among tourist experiences, city branding, and social media impact create a complex web of influences and interactions. However, the review also reveals gaps and limitations in existing research. Comprehensive and integrative frameworks and models are lacking, empirical studies examining diverse stakeholder perspectives are scarce, and there is a need for more comparative and longitudinal studies in different contexts.

Future research directions and recommendations include addressing these gaps to contribute to the theoretical and practical advancement of event tourism knowledge. Analyzing the interrelationships and implications of tourist experiences, city branding, and social media impact requires holistic frameworks that consider the perspectives and experiences of various stakeholders, including residents, organizers, and service providers. Comparative and longitudinal studies should explore the variations and changes in event tourism in different contexts, such as developing and developed countries, urban and rural areas, and cultural and natural settings. By addressing these gaps, future research can provide valuable insights that enhance our understanding of event tourism and contribute to its sustainable development.

RESEARCH METHODS

The exploration of event tourism demands a meticulous approach, and this research employs a qualitative design rooted in the postpositivist philosophy. This paradigm positions the researcher as the key instrument, examining objects in their natural conditions, devoid of experimental setups (Sugiyono, 2019). The overarching aim is to unravel the intricate dynamics within the realm of event tourism, acknowledging its complexity and the diverse range of stakeholders involved.

The foundation of this study is meticulously crafted through an exhaustive examination of contemporary research journals. The works of Getz (2020) and Dedeog̃lu et al. (2019) emerge as crucial contributors, emphasizing the multifaceted nature of event tourism. These scholarly contributions serve as vital reservoirs of knowledge, offering diverse perspectives and nuanced insights into the complexities characterizing event tourism.

To ensure a comprehensive understanding of the multifaceted nature of event tourism, the research initiates a methodical and extensive review of relevant research journals. Each journal is carefully chosen for its direct relevance to the focus areas outlined: tourist experiences, city branding, and the impact of social media on destinations hosting events. The works of Al-Dweik (2020), Boonsiritomachai and Phonthanakitithaworn (2019), among others, form integral components of this comprehensive exploration.

The depth and breadth of these sources contribute to the richness of the study, ensuring a holistic understanding of the multifaceted nature of event tourism. The data analysis process unfolds through a qualitative synthesis of key findings and insights derived from the meticulously reviewed journals. Themes and patterns related to tourist experiences, city branding, and social media impact are not merely identified but are subject to a critical examination that goes beyond surface-level observations.

This rigorous analysis of existing literature is undertaken to construct a coherent and nuanced narrative that elucidates the interconnections and dynamics within the expansive realm of event tourism. Drawing insights from Agyapong and Yuan (2022), the study strives to provide a comprehensive and in-depth understanding of the complexities inherent in the intricate interaction of these dimensions.

The theoretical framework posits event tourism as not merely a standalone phenomenon but a confluence of factors shaping the destination experience for tourists. Insights from Agyapong and Yuan (2022) guide the study in navigating the intricate interaction of tourist experiences, city branding, and social media impact. The goal is to contribute to the ongoing discourse, providing a nuanced understanding of the dynamics at play in event tourism.

While the descriptive qualitative method yields valuable insights, transparency demands an acknowledgment of inherent limitations. The study operates within the constraints of available research journals, and while these sources provide invaluable perspectives, they may not comprehensively encapsulate the diverse array of experiences and practices within the expansive field of event tourism.

Additionally, the dynamic nature of the field introduces a temporal dimension, where some literature may become outdated, necessitating a cautious interpretation of findings. These acknowledged limitations serve not as deterrents but as catalysts for a reflective and nuanced interpretation of the study's findings. They underscore the need for continual vigilance and adaptability, recognizing the dynamic landscape in which event tourism operates.

In conclusion, enriched by insights from various scholarly contributions, this research strives to contribute significantly to the understanding of event tourism dynamics. By navigating the complexities of tourist experiences, city branding, and social media impact, it aims to be a valuable addition to the ongoing discourse in the field. Addressing inherent challenges and opportunities, this study endeavors to provide a nuanced perspective, acknowledging the evolving nature of event tourism. As the tourism landscape continues to evolve, this research sets the stage for further exploration and understanding of the intricate dimensions within event tourism, offering a comprehensive and insightful analysis.

RESULTS AND DISCUSSIONS

The amalgamation of literature pertaining to event tourism reveals a rich tapestry of positive and impactful influences across various dimensions. This section delves into the significant findings, shedding light on the profound nature of event tourism on tourist experiences, city branding, and social media.

Numerous studies, exemplified by the analysis of the Sarajevo Film Festival (Čizmić and Čaušević, 2017), underscore the unequivocal positive impact of events on tourist experiences. The immersive nature of events not only contributes to the quality of these experiences but also creates indelible moments that enhance overall satisfaction. This emphasizes the pivotal role events play in shaping positive tourist experiences. Event organizers, understanding this influence, can strategically curate activities that resonate with the cultural fabric of a destination, fostering a deeper connection with visitors. This positive encounter significantly influences tourists' perceptions and increases the likelihood of revisiting the destination.

The examination of MotoGP Tourism events in Mandalika (Nugroho & Pradini, 2022) brings to light the positive and significant impact of events on city branding. Successful city branding efforts, when coupled with well-executed events, contribute synergistically to the development of a distinctive and appealing city brand (Al-Dweik, 2020). This, in turn, influences tourists' decisions to revisit, creating a positive feedback loop.

The symbiotic relationship between event tourism and city branding emerges as a powerful tool for destination management (Agyapong and Yuan, 2022). Events serve as platforms for showcasing the unique attributes of a city, contributing significantly to the establishment of a positive city brand. This positive image enhances the destination's attractiveness and competitiveness in the dynamic tourism market.

Consistently, the literature highlights the positive and significant impact of events on tourism destinations through social media channels. The study on Danau Situ Tunggilis (Slamet & Juvoni, 2023) exemplifies how social media amplifies the appeal of a destination, with events serving as shareable and visually compelling content. In the digital age, the influence of social media is monumental. Events, as visually captivating experiences, become powerful tools for destination marketing through platforms like Instagram and Facebook. The positive impact on social media amplification not only increases the destination's visibility but also shapes the narrative surrounding the destination positively.

The cumulative positive influences across tourist experiences, city branding, and social media underscore the holistic impact of event tourism on destination development. The interdependence of these factors highlights the potential for sustainable tourism development through strategic event planning and management.

Sustainable event tourism practices involve a comprehensive approach that considers the interconnectedness of tourist experiences, city branding efforts, and social media utilization. By aligning these elements, destinations can foster long-term positive effects, promoting sustainable development in the tourism sector (Al-Dweik, 2020).

In essence, the results underscore the transformative power of event tourism in shaping not only individual experiences but also the broader image and sustainability of tourist destinations. The positive impacts observed across multiple dimensions emphasize the need for strategic and integrated approaches to event planning and management, recognizing the intricate interplay between tourist experiences, city branding, and social media influence.

The implications of these findings extend beyond academic discourse, offering actionable insights for various stakeholders in the tourism industry. Event organizers, destination managers, policymakers, and local communities can benefit from a nuanced understanding of the multifaceted influences of event tourism. Event organizers, for instance, are urged to recognize the strategic importance of crafting experiences that align with the cultural identity of a destination. By doing so, they can create lasting and positive impressions, influencing visitors to become repeat tourists.

Destination managers are urged to recognize the symbiotic relationship between event tourism and city branding. Successful events can serve as catalysts for building a distinctive city brand, fostering a positive image that resonates with potential visitors. Policymakers, in turn, should consider the long-term impact of supporting and promoting events as part of a comprehensive tourism strategy.

Local communities, an integral part of the tourism ecosystem, are encouraged to actively participate in the planning and execution of events. Their involvement not only ensures that events align with local values but also fosters a sense of ownership and pride in the destination's cultural heritage.

While the positive findings are robust, it is crucial to acknowledge certain limitations. The research primarily draws upon existing literature, and the scope is confined to available research journals. While these sources provide valuable insights, they may not encompass the full spectrum of experiences and practices within the expansive field of event tourism. Additionally, the dynamic nature of the tourism industry implies that some literature may become outdated over time, requiring a cautious interpretation of findings.

In conclusion, the synthesis of literature underscores the transformative impact of event tourism on tourist experiences, city branding, and social media. The positive influences observed across these dimensions highlight the potential for sustainable tourism development through strategic event planning and management. The study not only contributes to the theoretical understanding of event tourism dynamics but also offers practical recommendations for stakeholders to enhance the overall tourism experience and foster sustainable destination development.

Conclusions

In summation, the exploration of event tourism through an extensive review of literature reveals a landscape rich with positive and significant influences. The intricate interplay of tourist experiences, city branding, and social media impact underscores the transformative potential of events in shaping and enhancing destinations. As we distill the essence of these findings, several key conclusions emerge.

Event tourism emerges as a dynamic catalyst for holistic destination enhancement. The positive impact on tourist experiences, exemplified by the Sarajevo Film Festival, showcases the potential for events to create meaningful and memorable encounters for visitors. This holistic approach to destination development aligns seamlessly with the evolving expectations of the contemporary traveler, who seeks immersive and culturally resonant experiences (Čizmić & Čaušević, 2017).

The Sarajevo Film Festival, renowned for its immersive and culturally rich experiences, serves as a prime example of how events can go beyond mere attractions. By creating meaningful encounters for visitors, such events contribute significantly to the holistic enhancement of destinations. This aligns with the contemporary traveler's desire for immersive and culturally resonant experiences that leave a lasting impact.

City branding emerges as a strategic lever positively influenced by events. The success story of MotoGP Tourism in Mandalika illustrates how events contribute to shaping a distinctive and appealing city brand. Recognizing events as powerful brand ambassadors allows destinations to strategically position themselves in the competitive tourism landscape, fostering a positive and lasting image (Nugroho & Pradini, 2022).

MotoGP Tourism in Mandalika exemplifies the symbiotic relationship between events and city branding. The success of well-executed events contributes significantly to the development of a distinctive and appealing city brand. Events, in this context, serve as powerful tools for destination management, shaping a positive image that resonates with potential visitors and enhances competitiveness in the dynamic tourism market.

The literature consistently underscores the symbiotic relationship between events and social media, showcasing the potential for widespread positive impact. The case of Danau Situ Tunggilis emphasizes the role of social media in amplifying the appeal of destinations hosting events. The digital age presents a paradigm where events become not only physical experiences but also powerful narratives disseminated through online platforms, influencing global perceptions (Slamet & Juvoni, 2023).

Danau Situ Tunggilis, as a case study, exemplifies the transformative influence of social media on destination appeal. Through events, destinations can leverage social media as a powerful tool for amplifying their attractiveness. In the digital age, events serve not only as physical experiences but also as compelling narratives disseminated through online platforms, shaping global perceptions and expanding visibility.

The cumulative positive influences underscore the potential for sustainable destination development through strategic event planning. By recognizing the interconnectedness of tourist experiences, city branding efforts, and social media utilization, destinations can foster a balanced and enduring growth trajectory. This holistic perspective on sustainability encourages stakeholders to consider the long-term implications of their decisions in the realm of event tourism (Teixeira et al., 2019; Velikova, 2016).

Sustainable destination development, as illuminated by the cumulative positive influences of event tourism, involves a comprehensive and interconnected approach. Aligning tourist experiences, city branding efforts, and social media utilization can pave the way for a balanced and enduring growth trajectory. Stakeholders are urged to adopt a holistic perspective on sustainability, considering the long-term implications of their decisions within the dynamic landscape of event tourism.

For stakeholders in the tourism industry, including event organizers, destination managers, and policymakers, these conclusions offer actionable insights. The findings suggest a need for collaborative efforts to design and implement events that transcend mere attractions, contributing to the overall development of a destination. Additionally, strategic alignment with city branding initiatives and harnessing the potential of social media become imperative components of a comprehensive destination strategy (Buhalis, 2022; Cahyani et al., 2023; Pakarti et al., 2017).

Stakeholders in the tourism industry are presented with actionable insights derived from the transformative dimensions of event tourism. Collaborative efforts are paramount in designing and implementing events that transcend the conventional, contributing significantly to the holistic development of destinations. Furthermore, strategic alignment with city branding initiatives and the effective utilization of social media emerge as imperative components of a comprehensive destination strategy.

While this review synthesizes existing knowledge, it also serves as a call for further exploration. Gaps in the literature, particularly within the context of developing nations, beckon researchers to delve deeper into the nuances of event tourism. Future studies could shed light on emerging trends, evolving consumer preferences, and the dynamic interplay of factors in an ever-changing global tourism landscape (González Reverté & Morales Pérez, 2017; Rashidi et al., 2020; Yu, 2020).

This comprehensive review acts as both a culmination of existing knowledge and a catalyst for future exploration in the realm of event tourism. The identified gaps in the literature, especially in the context of developing nations, present an opportunity for researchers to delve deeper into the intricacies of event tourism. Subsequent studies could provide valuable insights into emerging trends, evolving consumer preferences, and the dynamic interplay of factors within the continually evolving global tourism landscape.

In essence, the conclusions drawn from this exploration underscore the transformative potential of event tourism in shaping and enriching destinations. The multifaceted impacts on tourist experiences, city branding, and social media utilization offer a roadmap for stakeholders to navigate the evolving landscape of the tourism industry. As the global tourism paradigm continues to shift, these insights provide a foundation for informed decision-making and sustainable destination development.

Drawing upon the research findings on event tourism, a series of recommendations can be proposed to guide stakeholders in the tourism industry towards fostering sustainable growth and development:

1. Enhanced Stakeholder Collaboration:

- Encourage a more profound level of collaboration among stakeholders in the tourism industry, fostering stronger ties between event organizers, destination managers, and policymakers. This collaborative effort should extend towards more integrated and sustainable planning and execution of events. By working together synergistically, stakeholders can ensure that events not only captivate visitors but also contribute meaningfully to the overall prosperity of the destination.
2. Strategic Use of Social Media:
Advocate for a more strategic and deliberate use of social media to bolster tourism events. Stakeholders must grasp the pivotal role of social media in augmenting a destination's appeal and promoting tourist experiences through compelling online narratives. Utilizing platforms such as Instagram, Facebook, and Twitter strategically can significantly enhance the visibility and allure of events, creating a ripple effect that resonates globally.
 3. City Branding Development:
Direct focus towards the development of sustainable and distinctive city branding, leveraging the success of events as a catalyst. Destinations can harness the positive outcomes of well-executed events to shape an attractive city image and differentiate themselves in the competitive global tourism market. The narrative created by events becomes an integral part of a city's identity, contributing to a positive and lasting impression among potential visitors.
 4. Strategic Planning for Sustainable Development:
Advocate for strategic planning that prioritizes sustainable destination development. Stakeholders should consider the long-term implications of their decisions, not only on immediate tourist experiences but also on the broader aspects of city branding and social media utilization. Adopting a strategic and sustainable approach ensures that the positive impacts of tourism events reverberate through the destination, promoting enduring growth and development.
 5. Education and Local Community Engagement:
Promote the active involvement of the local community in the planning and execution of tourism events. Providing the community with a comprehensive understanding of the long-term benefits of successful events can foster local support and increased participation. Engaging the local community not only enhances the authenticity of events but also ensures that the socio-economic benefits are distributed equitably.
 6. Further Research and Understanding Developing Contexts:
Encourage and support further research initiatives, especially in developing countries. Additional studies can offer valuable insights into emerging trends, evolving consumer preferences, and the dynamic interplay of related factors in the ever-evolving global tourism landscape. Understanding the specific contexts of developing nations is crucial for tailoring strategies that align with their unique characteristics and challenges.
 7. Implementation of Best Practices:
Urge stakeholders to implement best practices gleaned from existing literature to maximize the positive impact of tourism events. This involves adjusting policies and practical actions to align with proven strategies that have demonstrated success. By adopting a best-practices approach, stakeholders can optimize outcomes, ensuring that events contribute not only to immediate tourism success but also to the sustainable development of the destination.

In conclusion, these recommendations are tailored to propel event tourism towards a trajectory of sustainable growth. By fostering collaboration, leveraging social media strategically, investing in city branding, adopting sustainable planning, engaging local communities, supporting further research, and implementing best practices, stakeholders can contribute to the holistic development of destinations and create a positive and lasting impact on the global tourism landscape.
